Relentlessly progressive

Adelaide has made a habit of breaking new ground. We were Australia's first university to welcome female students. The first to offer science and business degrees. The first with a conservatorium of music.

Among those who've studied, taught, or conducted research here are Australia's first female prime minister; space-walking astronaut; Indigenous Rhodes Scholar; and female Supreme Court judge, state governor and university chancellor. That's in addition to the 2021 Young Australian of the Year; 2020 Australian of the Year; and five Nobel Prize winners.

Exceptional research and education

Our bold spirit continues to drive us to excel. In research, as our state's only member of Australia's prestigious Group of Eight research-intensive universities, we're rising to global challenges in a huge range of fields, with work universally rated world-standard or above^.

In fact, our output—frequently collaborative with industry and government—is recognised as 'well above' world standard in 41 distinct areas. These range from space sciences, materials engineering and AI, to cardiorespiratory medicine, crop production and environmental science.

As a teaching university, we're ranked among the top 100 globally in 24 different subject areas†. In nine of those—including computer science, dentistry and veterinary science— we're top-50.

We also lead our state in graduate employability. Our degrees combine deep discipline knowledge with broad, transferable skills, ensuring graduates are well prepared for a multidimensional career in the future workforce.

The big difference is that in Australia I practise English every day, but at home I just use my English in class. I'm attending extra classes for speaking and pronunciation which is really good and helps me to improve my speaking skills."

7.4.
